The Taliban may have taken responsibility for the actual attack but that doesn't mean what the Northern Alliance said about the attack is true.

Notice it says the people killed in the blast were "reportedly" going to go to Hajj. Reported by who? By the Northern Alliance? By Hamid Karzai? By US special forces?

Every single time the Taliban or anyone else attacks them, they claim that only a very small number of soldiers were killed or injured and that the blast killed a lot of innocent people. Of course, we never see any proof of this. We know that the Northern Alliance and the US have no trouble filming the dead bodies or taking pictures, yet for some reason all they give us are their "reports".

The Taliban have in fact filmed some of their attacks which clearly do not kill civilians, but interestingly the Media and the puppet Afghan Government never reports these attacks, or if they do report, they claim that civilians were killed.

It's obvious why they would lie. They know that the best way to make religious people turn away from the Taliban, and for irreligious people to join the puppet Government is to make up such stories.

They don't mention any of the clear and massive attacks on military forces which are actually filmed by the Taliban and clearly show that civilians are not killed. They don't mention them, because they know that this would increase the Taliban's popularity.

They also of course don't mention their own attacks on civilians, even when there is undeniable proof that they committed these atrocities:

Children killed by US forces and their allies in 2001.

I never knew someone of your depth would fall to his bait. The poor chap can't even afford to make any sense.

I was tempted to reply to his above assertions, but I know that is exactly what he wants, just to get in with us - dicussing - since he has been outed. I could have asked him to show me one of my posts to justify his claims - but I prefer to steer clear of all pure filth.

Notice regarding both the child and the supposed civilians wanting to go to Hajj, it says "reportedly".

Al-Jazeera is saying that these were reported (obviously not by the Taliban, but by Northern Alliance and co.)

I agree with Sawtul Khilafah.

The reports that are emanating from the NATO/US/Afghan puppet are completely unreliable.

By the way those say that Taliban kills civilian must also produce the independant proof for the same. It is a deliberate attempt by the so called 'Main Stream' media to demonize every thing that taliban do.

I do not support taliban in thier every action. Definitely not. But I also do not want a one sided story in the name of 'Reliable Sources'. We all know how reliable these sources are!

How do they know that the insurgents belonged to Taliban, by the way? How do they(the taliban) claim responsibility for the attacks?

I don't think Taliban is operational now.

Its not sensible to club together whole of the Afghan resistance as Taliban. I think many small groups of insurgents are acting independently. They are not organised as a whole and they are not really affiliated to the Taliban.

Angela

The civilians were not the intended target of the attacks. Those who were enrolling for the police force were legitimate targets as they could have potentially fought against the Afghan resistance after joining the police force.

Hamid Karzai's govt. is a farce. Recognising it as an Afghan govt. is a shameless lie. Everyone knows it is there to serve the American interests.

First step in improving the condition of Afghanistan is to remove this farcical govt. from power.
